The ground-floor renovation of a mews house we worked on in north London has been shortlisted for the AJ Retrofit Awards 2023.

Trehela Williams architects have transformed a 'dark and insular' interior to a pared-back, open-plan living area. The joinery was influenced by the minimalist wooden sculptures of American artist Donald Judd.

Peter Dann designed steel frames to allow the internal cross walls to be removed at ground floor level opening up the internal space, as well as a moment frame at the rear of the property to support the large, glazed pivot door leading to the courtyard. A new floor was also installed within the original garage area and timber and steel elements designed to allow the construction of the bespoke floating bench in the courtyard and the striking timber louvre to the front of the property.
